

84 Days Away!

I hope this week finds you well. I am staying very close to my fan today as temperatures climb! This week is educators week for Organize NH. I am hosting an event this Thursday where we talk about schools re-opening, what local candidates are up to, and how our team is working to get democrats elected who will protect teachers and our schools. If you or someone you know is interested you can sign up here. It will only be an hour but will be a great time to connect with others (you can also meet my mom who I think is great).

As we celebrate Kamala Harris as our Vice Presidential nominee and prepare for the Democratic Convention we are hosting a week of action. There will be an event every day next week and I'll outline them below.

This month I went to a vigil surrounding Black Lives Matter & Peace and Justice in Canaan. I was really impressed with the organization of the vigil and of the response to the vigil. There are both positive and negative responses which proves that the fight is worth fighting! The vigils take place at 5:00 pm on Thursday.

With only 28 days until the primary, I was super thrilled that my absentee ballot made it. If you haven't received yours yet I recommend tracking its status via the Secretary of State at this website.

Getting Involved

We are now doing phone banking and text banking. Both of these efforts can be done from the comfort of your own home. It's the best way to make a difference this November. You can see all my events for the week here.

If you don't see something that fits to your schedule it's my job to make it work. We can set up a meeting and figure it out. If you're going to do one thing this week then attending the educator's event would be helpful to me because I want to hear from as many community members as possible! Here's the link for that again: <https://www.mobilize.us/organizeh/event/294070/>
